Introduction

This report was compiled by the Key Centre for Architectural Sociology at www.archsoc.com. The primary author was Dr Garry Stevens. This document is written in Australian English. If you have a problem with that, complain to someone who cares.

This report uses the data from www.archsoc.com's 2009 rankings of the architecture schools in the English speaking world to provide a research score for each architecture academic {professor, don}. Because of the very low turnover in architectural academics, the results of this survey should be robust until our next study in 2014.

The data was collected from November 2008 to January 2009.

This report documents every academic for whom we could obtain data, who worked for an architecture school in these nations:

- United States of America
- United Kingdom
- Canada
- Australia
- New Zealand
- Republic of South Africa
- Eire
- Hong Kong
- Singapore

We examined:

- Over 160 architecture schools
- Over 3,000 architecture academics

What we measured

We examined the databases at the two largest and most prestigious architecture libraries in the English-speaking world:

- the online catalogue of the Royal Institute of British Architects British Architectural Library;
- the online catalogue of the Avery Index to Architectural Periodicals at the Avery Architectural and Fine Arts Library, at Columbia University.

We examined how often each academic appeared in the databases, and used this as an indicator of research performance. We assigned to each academic a research score, which is a simple sum of the references in the two databases, with the RIBA references weighted to reflect the fact that they significantly outnumber the number of references in Avery.

Who we counted

We obtained the names of the academics at each school from the school's website¹. We took each site at face value. We used the smallest administrative unit possible, preferably a department of architecture. Several sites could not be bothered to distinguish those teaching architecture from those teaching, say, real estate law. In such cases we used all those listed.

We did not count part-timers, sessionals, visitors, affiliates, honoraries, instructors and those below the rank of lecturer; adjuncts, or professors emeritus (emerita).

We searched for a name without exhaustively checking if it was this John Smith or that John Smith. We did not often encounter problems. Our search made no attempt to take into account double-counting. So if A, B and C were listed as co-authors of the one book or article, then A, B and C got one count each.

We ignored academics who seemed to be employed full-time at different universities.

We also checked for misspellings and name variations ('Pani' and 'Panayiata'). You can't get any fairer than that, can you? In short, the searches were both generous and rigorous.

What this data might be useful for

We suggest that those attempting higher degrees in architecture would find this list useful when looking for research institutions.

What this data is not useful for

We make no claim that this data will help students wishing to become architects, those looking for a school. Read the title guys: it's a ranking of excellence in research, not in teaching.

How we have reported the data

Rather than give a specific number for the Research Score of each academic, we have divided them into percentiles (well, deciles, really); in which academics are listed alphabetically. Because of the highly discontinuous nature of the Research Score distribution, the numbers of individuals in each percentile differs.

Corrections welcomed

Please send any corrections to the contact address listed for Dr Garry's Key Centre for Architectural Sociology, www.archsoc.com.

¹ So if you find a name misspelled, complain to the school's website, not to us.

Appendix A. Rating the academics

This Appendix lists all those academics who have a score above zero. They are ranked by percentile. Appendix A lists everyone with at least one publication listed in our databases.

See Appendix B for university professors with a score of zero. Most architecture professors actually fail to score above zero on our indices.
